In the agenda of social justice, educating teachers for equity has emerged as a trend in teacher preparation in the U.S. However, this progressive trend of teacher education has been unexplored in many countries, including Vietnam. This research study was conducted in order to explore how pre-service teachers of English as a foreign language developed dispositions for social justice by being engaged in local communities. The findings show that engagement in communities helped pre-service teachers discover inequalities between families inherent in their attitudes and investment in children's English learning.
