DREXEL UNIVERSITY
Dornsife
School of Public Health

Global Health Lessons from the Intersex Human Rights Movement

The push to recognize bodily autonomy rights for people born with variations of the sex characteristics (also known as intersex traits) has gained significant momentum globally in the past decade. Success thus far, and current strategies to gain more ground, invite reflection on broader issues in global health: medical authority, evidence-based policy, ethics, and the ability of a system to course-correct and apologize for harms done.

Speaker: Kyle Knight, Senior Researcher, Human Rights Watch and Drexel University Dornsife School of Public Health Visiting Global Health Scholar

Thursday, March 3 from 12pm – 1pm, via Zoom

RSVP: https://bit.ly/34yEWMA

Moderated by Nina Sun, Deputy Director, Global Health and Assistant Clinical Professor, CHP

Questions? Contact nys28@drexel.edu

Drexel Dornsife School of Public Health,
Nesbitt Hall,
3215 Market St.
Philadelphia, PA, 19104

DREXEL UNIVERSITY
Office of Global Health
Dornsife School of Public Health

DREXEL UNIVERSITY
Office of Global Health
Dornsife School of Public Health