Learn About New Drexel Cannabis Research with Janna Ataiants, DrPH., and Ekaterina Federova, DrPH.

Sponsored by Drexel University's Medical Cannabis Research Center

Dr. Janna Ataiants is a Senior Research Scientist in the Dornsife School of Public Health at Drexel University. Her research examines how gender, social contexts, and marginalization shape drug use experiences.

Dr. Ekaterina Fedorova is also a Senior Research Scientist in the Dornsife School of Public Health at Drexel University. Her work included psychological counseling and research within HIV prevention cohort studies among opioid injectors in St. Petersburg, Russia.

For the last several years, Drs. Ataiants and Federova have been a working for a NIDA-funded cohort study of young adult cannabis users in Los Angeles. They are currently working on the Drexel University's Medical Cannabis Research Center's team as Co-Investigators on the Patient Registry Study which tracks health trends and use patterns for medical cannabis patients in the commonwealth.

Dr. Ataiants will be presenting on her new manuscript titled, "Assessing Anxiety Longitudinally Among Medical Cannabis Patients in Pennsylvania. Dr. Federova will be presenting on her new manuscript titled, "Terpene and Cannabinoid Profile Preferences and Cannabis Use Practices in Medical Cannabis Patients Who Use Cannabis for Anxiety and Pain."
