Multidisciplinary Perspectives on Careers in Maternal and Child Health (MCH): An Evening with Professionals to Explore MCH research and Careers

Maternal and Child Health (MCH) is one of the broadest disciplines in health-related fields. MCH careers span all areas in public health including community health and prevention, epidemiology/biostatistics, health management and policy, and environmental and occupational health. While the demands of the MCH workforce are great, there is evidence that the number of MCH professionals is declining. As a result, there is recent national emphasis on improved training for current MCH professionals and students preparing to enter the field. The Maternal and Child Working Group aims to support this endeavor through its activities at the School of Public Health.

At this event, students interested in MCH will have the opportunity to meet an array of multidisciplinary professionals working in MCH. Students will learn about MCH research opportunities, career options, and career paths. Students will be able to discuss with professionals and SPH alumni what to do now to best prepare for a career in MCH.
