Supporting International Students during the COVID-19 Pandemic and Beyond

Wednesday, November 18, 2020 at 12:00 p.m. ET

International students play a critical role in U.S. higher education. The global reach of COVID-19 has dramatically affected this population of students. It has shifted the way universities support current international students as well as strategies used to recruit students from abroad.

During this virtual panel event, professionals who work in international student services and admissions will explore the changing landscape of higher education with a specific focus on both the challenges experienced by international students and emergent institutional responses. Drawing on research and applied experience, they will offer best practices for supporting international students in the U.S. and those who remain abroad.

Presented by:

Dr. Jennifer Adams, Associate Professor, Drexel University's School of Education

Chad Buckwalter, Assistant Director of International Student Services, Denison University

Danielle Ditty, Senior Assistant Director of Admissions and Coordinator of International Recruitment, Gettysburg College

Jillian Layaou, Assistant Director of International Graduate Admissions, Clarkson University

Mladenka Tomasevic, Executive Director of International Student and Scholars, Drexel University
